WOODLAND WONDER TALES

By Cousin Eleanor

minute believe what Mr. Jay told him. He did not believe that Grandaddy Gray has said all those flat-tering things to Mr. Jay. He doubted it chiefly because the brier bush, where Bobbity and Bonny and the babies live, lies beneath and to one side of the Old Oak. When Mr. Blue Jay paid his early morning call of Grandaddy Gray, Babbity Babtail was still at home. The sun was not yet high enough in the sky to warm the Sunny Slope, so Bobbity had not yet started out for his sun bath. He and the children were nibbling here and there on sweet bits of bark and occasionally on a bit of clover while my did the daily household chores. Hearing a voice above in the brown cak branches they stopped to listen. It was not the murmuring voice of the bak itself whose dry brown leaves 'whispered constantly through the autumn day and leaving the branch, rustled to the earth beneath. This was a shrill, insistant tone, the voice of Mr. Blue Jay, no one else, and what it said was quite too amusing to permit Bobbity Bobtail to go away to his place on the Sunny Slope at the usual hour. He stayed to eavesdrop long ears towering above his head, catching every sound, hearing every word.

So when Mb, Blue Jay came above. So when Mr. Blue Jay came abrag-ging and abousting of the flattering Mr. Tip Tail Fox. Then where would we be?"

things that Grandaddy Gray had said to him, Bobbity Bobtail nodded his Bonny Bobtail did not answer, bu ashamed of her hasty words she crept ad, winked an eye, and his nose ook with a wish to laugh. But Bobinto the deepest thicket of the brier bush with ears laid back and eyes full bity is a bit of gentleman and a lot of a coward, so he kept what thoughts and knowledge he had to himself and attended Mr. Jay's story to the end. Next Story: Mr. Jay Again.

"How could you?" asked his wife onny. "How could you listen to his THE PERSON WHO SMILES. The person who smiles is the person who wins

AN INTERESTING INCIDENT OF MY SUMMER VACATION. September Essay Contest, Twelve-Year Class.

Award Winner. An interesting thing happened t me this summer. There was to be a swimming race at our beach fo girls under twelve years. As I could swim a little I thought I would enter the race for the sport of it. We were all ready to start and I thought to myself, "I hope I won't be the last." To my surprise I found myself ahead of the others and I reached the winning point just about two seconds ahead of the rest of the girls. I won a prize. This prize I shall keep to remind me of a most event while on my vacation. SYLVIA E. RANDALL, Beechhurst, L. I.
